show support for a great magazine and a grassroot's Christian effort read by more than 10,000 in the region

We never wanted to become another donation-dependent ministry. That said, fish does try to find a few sponsors each month to help us out. It can make a big difference when we are still a relatively new publication built on the backs of volunteer writers, editors and distributors from around the region.

"One goal was to create a free magazine to make it easy for area families to find out about regional events," said David Hamilton, fish publisher.

"And we plan to remain free, providing as many copies to churches, ministries and businesses as they want — as long as most get into the hands of local families. That doesn't mean it costs us nothing to produce fish, and we very much have appreciated those groups who have helped sponsor us."

The magazine looks for one or two businesses or churches to sponsor each issue. The commitment is small — a $100 donation in support of a respective month — but it makes a big difference.

Sponsors are featured on page 5 of the magazine, where they are offered a small profile and thanked by fish. If you are considering sponsorship, thank you for simply thinking of us. We are glad you like what we are trying to do here and we've appreciated the open arms.
